The iniquitous Dismal-Swamp lottery offices have at last been wiped out of existence in this city through the action of the Judge of the Hustings Court. About four months ago the Commonwealth's attorney.

Mr. Burroughs, filed an information against an agent of the concern, but was unable to bring it to an issue until about two weeks ago, since which time the Judge has had the arguments and demurrers under consideration. The latter part of last week he decaded adversely to the lottery, and on Friday, the last day of the old year, they close of their doors.

The catalogue of arrests by the police during the month of December reached the altitudinous figures of 276 for offences ranging from grand larceny, up or down, to selling newspapers without license. Much of this is doubtiess due to an improper observence of the bolidays just ended. A change in the management of the Lynchburg National Bank is expected to eccur at the annual meeting of the stock-bolders to be held to-morrow. These changes are consequent upon Mr. George W. Palmer, of Saitville, obtaining a controlling interest in the bank.

CONFESSION BY MRS ORENE. How the Murder of Her Hasbane

Was Committed,

The New York Star has published a con fession, made under advice of her counsel to its correspondent, by Mrs. Druse, the Herkiner-county murderess of her hus-band, whose case is now exciting so much interest. It implicates two men who have not heretofore been accused. After re-hearing the tale of his continual cruelty to her and the children, she says, as to the murder itself: "In the first place, I heard swearing before I got out of bed. He was swearing at Frank for having made a hot fire. Mary answered him, and he swore at me, and said that it was my place to see to it. He went out to the barn then, but what he did I don't know. He went to the well to wash. A beard we out the said he came in and board was out there, and he came in and asked: 'Who split up this board?' He said, 'You —, you.' I ran into the but-tery, and he followed me with the axe in his hand. He pounded at the door with the axe. The marks are still there. That the axe. The marks are still there. That was about 7 o'clock. Then there was something about the store bill I don't quite recollect. I told him that he had got part of the things for himself—tobacco and such. He then said, in a rage: 'There will be different arrangements before night. You'll not see another service. I'll stop your — breath.' He went to the barn with his pitchfork. When he came in, the te-had been steeped too long. I had the revolver in my bosom. I was

'You lie,' he said, and he grabbed hold of me. He raised the knife so," and with this Mrs. Druse raised her hand and illustrated the way the knife was held. The examination in the case of Mrs. Anne Smith, who is charged with having taught Lillian Smith, the eleven-year-old daughter of Mrs. Lizzie Smith, to steal pocket-books, was resumed yesterday before Judge Ford, at the Essex-Market Police Court. Lillian was cross-examined by Lawyer Hathaway. She said that she had three brothers and one sister, the eldest ten years of age and the youngest two. A man whom she called "Grandps Mack" was in the habit of visiting the house, and frequently took her to theatres, museums, &c., gave her money, and always gave her papa money when he was out of work. With the most innocent expression in the world she looked Mr. Hathaway in the face with her big blue cyes and gravely said that she had never stolen anything in her life before she went to live with Mrs. Smith, about a month ago.

"Do you know God will punish you if you tell a lie?" the lawyer asked.

"Yes, papa taught me that," she answered, and then in reply to a direct question she admitted that she went one evening to the elevated raliroad station at One-bundred-and-sixth-street, and telling Mr. Hopkins, the night ticket-seller, that she was then asked if she knew Mrs. Beekman.
